Eastern China: Shanghai–Po Yang Lake, 15th–28th December 2017

INTRODUCTION This trip report details a birding and tourism visit (in that order!) to Eastern China, travelling from Shanghai to Nanchang (Po Yang Lake area) by car over the course of 14 days and then flying back to Shanghai. Birding sites visited were the Wuyuan area (2 days), Emei Feng mountain (3 days) and Po Yang Lake (3 days); we also spent a few days being tourists at Huangzhou city and Huangshan (Yellow Mountain) and fitted in a little bit of Shanghai birding (1 ½ days) at either end. As relatively few trip reports are available from Eastern China by birders not on a fully organized tour, we thought it might be useful to outline our trip, although it was not strictly independent in the sense that we booked through a local agent and, in the end, had an excellent guide with us throughout. Birding was absolutely top-notch with highlights including views never to be matched of Cabot's Tragopan (see above; four other gamebirds seen well), Scaly-sided Mergansers, many great Asian buntings, thrushes and forktails, plus three full days of cranes, geese and other waterfowl (including three Baer's Pochard!) at Po Yang, one of the world's greatest wetlands for sure.

Logistics We arranged this trip with help of Steven An of China Dream Tours (email info@chinadreamstour.com). Steven replied promptly and helpfully to all emails. We had initially asked for a driver that spoke some English (essential as virtually nobody seemed to speak any English anywhere on this route) and some help with gen but found out, just a week before kick-off, that, due to a cancellation, Steven himself was coming with us himself. This was a massive stroke of luck; he is both a fantastic guide and a great guy all round and we recommend him unreservedly for trips anywhere in China. Steven was very happy for us to make some of the arrangements (internal flight, booking some hotels online) and he sorted out the rest, plus transport, local access, all the daily planning etc. He joined us every evening for dinner, meaning we could try lots of amazing local restaurants that we'd never have dared attempt otherwise. Weather and birding Cold; very cold at times and full winter gear was definitely required early mornings, and sometimes most of the day. Po Yang was actually relatively mild (compared to elsewhere) and we avoided the dreaded fog that sometimes clogs that place for days on end. Most days were calm, clear, bright and very crisp although Shanghai at both ends of the trip was cloudy, raw and rainy. Birding was really excellent, with a fantastic mixture of Siberian wintering birds, eastern China specials and, especially at Emei Feng, a quite pronounced south-east Asian influence. Although many of the forests were very cold and very quiet (and this probably was the reason we failed on Barred and Buffy Laughingthrushes, whilst Indochinese Yuhina was seen only poorly), the gamebirds of Emei Feng and wetlands on a near-unimaginable scale at Po Yang more than made up for that; some of the scrubby fields and paddies we worked were very good for buntings and other wintering passerines, as were areas we tried in the environs of Shanghai, despite limited time here. Although most of our trip was very rural, many areas of fields and forests seemed quiet and oddly devoid of birds. Very little was singing and we sometimes had long periods between bouts of action.

What to bring A scope is almost as vital as lots of warm clothes; sites such as Po Yang have enormous horizons, and often not much is really close. Photographic opportunities weren't too bad at times, as a perusal of this report will show. With little calling, sound-recording was rather less important; a selection of recordings made on this trip can be downloaded from this link. Few species, with the notable exception of Marsh Grassbird, had much interest in playback. Brazil's Field Guide to the Birds of East Asia is perfectly adequate even as far west as Po Yang, although coverage of tricky species and the details of some Chinese distribution maps was often flaky. Almost as useful as several hats, flasks for hot water, mugs and lots of cup-a-soups, porridge or similar was extremely useful to have for warming up on the go. We won't return again without a translation app, although having Steven definitely lessened the importance of this. Be sure to download any apps such as Maps.ME before arrival in China, as Google aren't ever going to be the Chinese government's company of the year.

Accommodation Like the infrastructure in general, accommodation was surprisingly good, with everywhere being warm and welcoming, with plentiful hot and water and, usually, wifi. Our trip was unexpectedly very rural and we saw few places of any consequence, and a lot of countryside, between Hangzhou and Nanchang. The (small) city of Taining was a real eye-opener and well worth seeing; even the little of Shanghai we saw looked perfectly bearable and well-organised. India it was not...

Huangzhou (2 nights)	Huachen International Hotel https://www.booking.com/hotel/cn/huachen- international.en-gb.html?	Big downtown hotel, c1km walk from the lake. Excellent buffet-style breakfasts.
Huangshan (2 nights)	Huangshan Yuanshe Homestay https://www.booking.com/hotel/cn/huangshan- yuanshe-homestay.en-gb.html	Small, friendly family guesthouse. No English spoken. Seriously filling hot noddle breakfast soup.
Wuyuan (2 nights) (30min drive to Kengkoucun and Xingjiang River)	7 Days Inn https://www.booking.com/hotel/cn/7days- sunshine-wuyuan-tianyou-road.en-gb.html	Standard budget hotel chain, boring but fine. Washing machine & dryer in the lobby useful for mid-trip laundry. Especially if you've gone sprawling in wet mud
Taining (3 nights); (45 min drive to Emei Feng)Nanchang (up to 1-1 ½ hr drive to Po Yang lake, depending on which precise site was visited)	Hotels at these sites were booked by Steven and we didn't pay much attention to names or locations.	All hotels (one Taining; two Nanchang) fine but very Chinese and with 'breakfast' to match. Taining was actually a very pretty, pleasant city and well worth a walk around, and hence rather different from busy and dreary Nanchang.
Shanghai (less than 1 hr to Nanhui; c 30mins to Century Park in the other direction)	The QUBE, Pudong http://www.thequbepudonghotel- shanghai.com/	Big, plush hotel c10mins from the airport. Not quite sure how we ended up here, or why they upgraded (or even admitted) us on arrival but they did and it was good.

Sites visited [Any co-ordinates given below come straight off Google Maps]

1. Huangzhou (c2.5 hrs drive west south west from Shanghai) (general area 30.244987, 120.129076)

Not essential for birding, but a good place to begin a China tour and with some interest for civilian members of the party, including shopping, restored historical streets and a few quaint little towns and some walking. We spent a rather grey and misty day (after much rain the day before) in Longjin tea plantations (approx. coordinates 30.220597, 120.113422) and damp forest 5km beyond the lake, plus the afternoon walking round the east shore of the lake, eventually amongst hordes of people. The tea gardens and paths through the forest there got us started nicely, with the likes of Grey-headed Parrotbill, Grey-backed Thrush, Speckled Piculet, Yellow-bellied Tit and several very obliging flocks of Chinese Grosbeak. The few species on or by the lake included Goosander, Chinese Blackbird and Vinous-throated Parrotbill.

2. Hongcun Traditional Village (c4hr drive west from Huangzhou in total) (30.000884, 117.991656)

Again, a tourist rather than birding spot, but a pleasant place to spend a few hours in the afternoon. En-route to here, we stopped at Tunxi, a nice, historic town for a walk and lunch, and visited the restored ancient shopping streets. Hongcun village itself, an hour further along and apparently very famous across China, was well worth seeing and after an hour or two of that, we went birding. In or by the village we had Silver-throated Bushtit, Plumbeous Water Redstart, Brown Dipper and Common Kingfisher. Rather more interesting were the paddyfield and scrubby edges nearby, in a valley running into a mostly dry lake. Here we had the only Bonelli's Eagles and Russet Sparrows of the trip, Daurian Redstart and opened our account on Olive-backed Pipit.Above: Hongcun village (MS); below Huangshan scenery (MS)

3. Huangshan (Yellow Mountain) (c1.5 hr drive from Hongcun) (general area 30.136622, 118.165586)

Classic Chinese scenery, with endless ridges and hills, covered in pine trees and stretching into the misty haze on all sides. We took a cable car up to one end and walked the maze of trails to the other, spending most the day up here on this sky island. A good dusting and more of new snow covered everything, with the bright, clear skies certainly added to the experience, although may have driven any interesting birds far downhill and out of our reach, as well as attracted hordes of tourists. (Apparently these were nothing compared to the place in summer, however.) Japanese and Coal Tits apart, the forests were extremely quiet up here although we had a few Bramblings and, eventually Streak-throated Scimitar-Babbler. At the bottom of the cable car we came down on, we saw Mountain Bulbul and, rather frustratingly, a fastmoving and none-too-close gang of Indochinese Yuhinas. Back down in the valley we spent an hour late afternoon checking a small stream and associated fields at another village *c*5km outside Huangshan; this yielded both Little and White-crowned Forktails (which seemed a big deal at the time, although not in the subsequent light of the next few days...) and Bull-headed Shrike. Early morning, the river by the hotel hosted amazing reflections and Brown Dipper.

- Wuyuan (c3 hour drive south west from Huangshan, via Xiaoqicun) Three birding sites visited in this area.
 Right: Wuyuan pandas (MS); below Wuyuan megas (OC)
- A. Xiaoqicun village (c2 hour drive from Huangshan; then c1 hour further on to Wuyuan) (29.393974, 118.025850)

We stopped in this small and tidy village to see the family of Pied Falconets that are local celebrities here. They were present on arrival (0900; Steven thought it was important to get here early; sure enough there was no sign when we went back for lunch) and we spent a well over an hour on the rooftop of a local restaurant (several of which have viewing platforms and blinds for photographers) watching them, sometimes at very close range. Crested Goshawk, Black Eagle and our first (of many) Red-billed Starlings featured here, whilst a look at the river from various points back along the road we came in on produced the likes of Crested Kingfisher, Yellow-browed Bunting, and the only Japanese White-eyes of the trip. The river at the village parking lot produced unbelievable close-ups of Little Forktail, with White-crowned Forktail not much less sociable.

B. Kengkoucun/ Xingjiang River (30 minute drive south from Wuyuan) (29.164598, 117.841804)

We spent one afternoon here, plus most of the following day. The main attraction, Scalysided Mergansers, where easily found well upstream from the main bridge and, although not really close, the afternoon light and clarity was truly outstanding. Adding in some 50+ Mandarins flying around and Long-billed Plover found by walking down to the shingle shore and scanning carefully, the whole experience was most memorable. We also spent quite some time on the forest edge here, mainly walking the very quiet road from the bridge that runs for several km to a tiny hamlet (29.174650, 117.821527) that, bar the colourful washing hung up, could have been straight out of 1950s China. The forests were actually very quiet on the whole, with few flocks and little song or call. With persistence, we found a few good parties of Huet's Fulvettas, carriers for the likes of Pallas's Warbler, Rufouscapped Babbler and Streak-breasted Scimitar Babbler. Other notables included a poor view of female Fork-tailed Sunbird, a group of Elegant Buntings, several fairly co-operative Grey-sided Scimitar Babblers, and Orange-bellied Leafbird. A narrow trail running along the near bank of the Xing river from Kengkoucun was tried for specials such as Buffy Laughingthrush and Spotted Elachura but proved very quiet.

C. Yuelieng Wan Island (15min drive from central Wuyuan) (29.248288, 117.859549 we think[!])

We had a very cold pre-breakfast visit to this well-wooded island that is famous for breeding Blue-crowned (Courtois's) Laughthrushes in spring. The wet woodland produced great looks at bluetails, Yellow-browed Buntings and Olive-backed Pipits and some good woodpecker and starling action, plus Bull-headed Shrike.

5. En-route between Wuyuan and Taining (27.81278, 117.95245)

To break up this rather long journey (5-6hrs) we stopped at a service station near Nanping, found a tunnel under the highway and spent nearly two hours on some narrow trails and a track leading up the hillside above. This proved a good choice; Fork-tailed Sunbird (excellent views of a male this time) and Chestnut Bulbul were seen well. Bird activity was rather high, and included Lesser Necklaced Laughingthrush, Red-billed Leiothrix, White-bellied Erpornis, Pallas's Warblers and a close bluetail.

Emei Feng (45min from Taining, which was c5-6hr drive south south west from Wuyuan) (27.010034, 117.077515)

We had a late afternoon, two full days, plus the best part of the morning on this famous mountain. The main attractions are the gamebirds and we spent a lot of time driving the quiet road to the top very slowly and watching carefully. This produced several Silver Pheasants near the summit on the first afternoon (with another group seen by OC on foot along the loop trail from monastery to waterfalls and back up), a male Elliot's Pheasant along the minor road several km beyond the turn up to entrance gate and several good sightings of Chinese Bamboo Partridge at various elevations (White-throated Partridge was only heard). The real monster of Emei Feng is, of course, Cabot's Tragopan. Having failed the first afternoon and next morning, we walked downhill from the top and finally found a male at *c*3pm, motionless on a mossy bank not far above us. Walkaway views in the scope, and this was all set to be bird of the trip. However, on the final morning, we tried a low mountain c15km further on beyond the road up to Emei Feng. This was very cold, very windy and very birdless until, on the descent, we had a female tragopan crossing the road in super-slow motion. She led to a male, who – ye gods! – emerged to feed unconcernedly for what felt like a slow-motion, scarcely breathed lifetime (but was in fact about 20mins or so) on a low bank by the verge at eye level at 10m range or, in a 50x Swarovski, on the end of one's nose. Yeeehaaaa!

Just like the gamebirds, birding Emei Feng in mid-winter for passerines and co was a rather slow, painstaking job. We spent rather a lot of time in the upper forest above the bamboo zone, where highlights included plenty of Great Barbets (25+ in one flock!), two Lesser Yellownapes, a rather brief view of Red-headed Trogon, Mountain Bulbuls and a group of Dusky Thrush. Three species of forktail all appeared on the road for some good views. The lower bamboo zone was much quieter with little apparent, but the slightly more varied mosaic of bamboo and scrubby woodland, especially along the road beyond the road running uphill to the summit was rather better with species including Speckled Piculet, Rufousfaced and Pallas's Warblers and Sultan Tit. Some good flocks of tits, bushtits and fulvettas and the odd bluetail were seen at various elevations; rice paddies towards and at the first village along the road yielded Asian Barred Owlet, over 50 Little Buntings, Blue Rock Thrush and a few Mandarins amongst commoner species. A few small lakes and pools further along were also checked.

7. Po Yang Lake (c3 hr drive north west from Emei Feng)

This superlative wetland, vast and bird-rich almost beyond imagination, was to be the highlight of our trip. Having talked about it – and its Siberian Cranes – for at least five years, it had a lot to live up to and, halfway through the first morning, it was clear we weren't going to be disappointed. This area is Steven's home patch and he knows it inside out. Infrastructure is good (very, very good compared to 10–15 years ago by all accounts) and reasonable roads make it possible to cover a wide variety of sites, all of which were excellent. Based in or around Nanchang (two different hotels used), we essentially spent $\frac{3}{4}$ -1 $\frac{1}{4}$ hrs driving out in the morning and then the rest of the day, until well after dusk, birding the minor roads, lotus ponds, marshy and muddy edges, shallow pools and main lake. The three main areas visited, one per day, were:

A. Wuxing Nang Cheng, including the Crane Lotus Pond (28.758243, 116.312909)

The main purpose of today was to visit a recently established lotus pond that is currently managed as a feeding and resting area for Siberian Cranes with access (100 RMB per person) for visitors. It was popular with photographers, with several hides, although it was late afternoon before the light was really suitable. We got here by 1400 and stayed to dusk; for most of the afternoon there were some 750 cranes present on the pool, at ranges down to c25m. The spectacle and noise was fantastic and it was hard to know where to look most of the time. Swan Goose was the other very common species present here and the Spotted Redshank swarm was targeted by a Peregrine, a species we were to see daily at Po Yang. Viewing the main lake area from the raised road en-route produced many more geese, 320 Oriental White Stork in one sweep of the scope and groups of Siberian, Common and (a few, isolated) Hooded Cranes. Stubble fields and scrub alongside farm ponds which we kicked (hard!) yielded Chinese Penduline Tit, Dusky Warbler, Chestnut-eared Bunting and a few Chinese Grey Shrikes, the latter the only ones we encountered. So, in summary, a helluva Christmas Day...

B. Nanjishan 'island' (28.957955, 116.352560)

En-route here we paused to check some stubble fields and hedgerows not far off the road. This was good for crane fly-bys (mainly Common), many starlings and four species of bunting, including a handful of Rustics. The main course, however, came when we crossed the wall and entered the environs of the lake. We worked our way out to Nanjishan, making many stops and then back again. Highlights were many and varied, including Hooded Cranes much closer than yesterday, a very good range of geese and ducks, including Smew and the first handful of Falcated Teal. The real hotspot, eventually, proved to be the very first large pool we passed after hitting the lake proper. A scan here at midday produced a fair scattering of Aythya (and we found Marsh Grassbird on the other side of the banks) but a return at *c*1630 with better light and less haze was sufficient to reveal three – ye gods! - Baer's Pochards, asleep on the east side. From the road, we sprinted along the banks and managed to get a fair bit closer for a very decent view, albeit in fading light. So, in summary, Christmas Day lasts a full 48hrs at Po Yang...

C. Wu Chen (general area 29.177315, 116.002245)

We visited this site on the last day, due to its proximity to Nangchang airport; we were able to keep going until 1515 before having to leave for the flight back to Shanghai. Again, a very good day, with a slightly different range of species seen. Brown Crake featured big time on the road in and, after working some flooded lotus ponds (with a flock of Rooks and Daurian Jackdaws nearby), we hit the wall and crossed down into the lake itself. Initially everything was very distant with low water levels and rather grey, hazy mist for most of the day. However, around

Wu Chen island itself we checked many large lakes, mostly on a vast scale and rather shallow. It took quite a while to find sites with birds close and we failed to find Lesser White-fronted Goose, possibly as we failed to find many really big, close flocks of Greater White-fronts. However, we did fall in with White-naped Crane (several families), have good comparisons (at last) of Tundra vs Taiga Bean Geese (with the distinctions far more subtle than in Western Europe) and round up over 150 Falcated Teal during the course of the day. A long perusal of our second, closer group of White-naped Cranes led to Brown-cheeked Rail, bold as brass in a tiny pool, with Grey-headed Lapwing nearby.

8. Shanghai sites

A. Century Park (c45mins W of the airport) (31.211688, 121.550531)

This large and spacious park was a good starting point (for OC) and finishing point (for MS), despite being rather well manicured and suffering lots of rain on both visits. However, the latter might have helped by keeping the locals away. Bird activity was rather high and this was easily the best site we visited for thrushes (lots of Dusky, Pale and Chinese Blackbirds; a few Grey-backed; one White's). Several Red-flanked Bluetails included the snazziest and tamest male of the trip with the likes of Brambling and Siskin adding interest. Definitely worth a visit, at least during winter and migration periods.

B. Nanhui and surrounding areas (1 hour south east of airport) (30.871719, 121.941827)

Right: Pallas's Reed Bunting (MS)

We tackled this on our last morning, having almost 4 hrs here. We started at a track into the reedbed a km or two south of the Holiday Inn hotel; despite light rain and drab, cold conditions we soon rounded up Pallas's Reed Buntings (good flock; eventually very close), Reed Parrotbills and bonus, very obliging Marsh Grassbirds (which we saw much better than at Po Yang). With the job done by 1000, we spent the final hour or two checking the shoreline, fields and pools to the north. It was great birding; several Peregrines, a male Eastern Marsh Harrier, Black-tailed Gull, more Pallas's Reed and Chestnut-eared Buntings and a few thrushes, including a male Naumann's were the highlights.

Hongcun sunset (OC)

Species list: from MS's records. Records from OC, including 21st Century Park on 15th Dec and a few other things seen only by him during the trip are not included. However, the few significant extras are noted in the site accounts above.
